BRAND GUIDELINES

Accountability Lab

A brand is a voice and a product is a souvenir."

– Lisa Gansky

Accountability Lab seeks to reimagine how to build accountability. Our vision is a world in which citizens are active, leaders are responsible and institutions are accountable. It is a world in which resources are used wisely, decisions benefit everyone fairly, and people lead secure lives. Our mission is to make governance work for people. We know there are no quick fixes, this will be a generational change and it will be a shared effort.

SWATCHES

Use these guidelines to determine the best way to apply the Accountability lab colour palette. Color palettes that feature multiple colors often dedicate specific colors to specific types of marketing content. While the first two colors of your color palette might govern your logo, for example, the next two colors might support your website and blog design. Another two or three colors might be the basis for all your printed branding material.

No matter what colors you use for your color palette, make sure you identify their HEX or RGB color codes. These codes consist of numbers and letters to help you recall the exact shade, brightness, contrast, and hue you want associated with your brand, so your colors don't gradually drift in appearance as you create new content. You can find color codes using most photo-editing or design software that comes standard on your computer.

TYPOGRAPHY

Typography is another visual element of your brand style guide, but it isn't just the font you use in your company logo. Typographic guidelines can support your blog design -- which font you publish articles in -- the links and copy on your website, and even a tagline to go with your company logo.

PHOTOGRAPHY

Your overall photography strategy is usually a combination of styles, including clean-cut feature images, close-ups, and lifestyle shots. How much you use of each also defines your brand.
